Appendix I. List of Standard Metropolitan Areas

Each standard metropolitan area has been defined in terms of one or more entire counties, except in New England where they comprise contiguous towns or cities.

A standard metropolitan area has been established and defined in connection with each city of 50,000 or more in 1950. Each area, therefore, contains one, and may contain more than one, city of 50,000 or more. When two cities of 50,000 or more are within 20 miles of one another, they have ordinarily been included in the same standard metropolitan area. Standard metropolitan areas may lie in more than one State.

The names of standard metropolitan areas indicate the central cities of the area since every central city name is included in the title. Although there may be several cities of 50,000 or more in a standard metropolitan area, not all are necessarily central cities. On the other hand, a city of less than 50,000 may sometimes be a central city of a standard metropolitan area. The largest city in a standard metropolitan area is always a central city. In addition, the second and third most populous cities in the area may qualify as central cities provided they have populations amounting to at least one-third of the largest city in the standard metropolitan area and have a minimum of 25,000 inhabitants. The one area in which the names of the central cities do not appear in the title is the New York-Northeastern New Jersey Standard Metropolitan Area of which the central cities are New York City, N. Y., Jersey City, N. J., and Newark, N. J.

Appendix II. List of Urbanized Areas

Urbanized areas have been defined only for those cities having a population of 50,000 inhabitants or more in 1940 or at some subsequent special census conducted by the Bureau of the Census. Two of the cities for which urbanized areas were defined--Fort Smith and Muskegon--fell below the 50,000 level on April 1, 1950; however, the urbanized areas for these cities were retained in the urbanized area list. There were 20 cities with a population of less than 50,000 in 1940 which passed that size by 1950 and which are not in any urbanized area.

The names of the urbanized areas indicate the central cities of the areas since the central cities appear in the title. Although an urbanized area may contain more than one city of 50,000 or more, all cities of this size are not necessarily central cities. The largest city of the area is always a central city. In addition the second and third most populous cities in the area may qualify as central cities provided they have populations amounting to at least one-third of the largest city in the area and have a minimum of 25,000 inhabitants. The one area in which the names of the central cities do not appear in the title is the New York-Northeastern New Jersey Urbanized Area of which the central cities are New York City, N. Y., Jersey City, N. J., and Newark, N. J.

The urbanized area must be distinguished from standard metropolitan areas. These, too, center on cities of 50,000 or more but are in general defined in terms of entire counties. As a result, an urbanized area tends to be considerably smaller in area and somewhat smaller in population than the standard metropolitan area having the same central city. Figures for the two types of areas are not comparable.

Listed below are the urbanized areas and the counties and independent cities in which they are located:
