Series PC-8, No. 1

POPULATION OF ALABAMA: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is one of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of Alabama on April 1, 1950, was 3,061,743, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 228,782, or 8.1 percent, over the 2,832,961 inhabitants enumerated in 1940. Among the States, Alabama ranked seventeenth in population. The 1950 population was about 24 times as great as its population in 1820 when Alabama was first enumerated as a State.

According to the new urban definition, Alabama had 1,340,937 persons living in urban territory and 1,720,806 persons in rural territory. The urban population comprised 43.8 percent of the population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, 22 of the 67 counties in Alabama increased in population. The most rapid rate of increase was recorded in Mobile County, which gained at the rate of 62.8 percent. The largest numerical increases were experienced in Jefferson and Mobile Counties, the most populous counties in the State, which had increases of 98,998 and 89,131, respectively. The combined gain of these two counties accounted for more than four-fifths of the population increase of the State. The counties in Alabama ranged in size from Coosa with a population of 11,766 to Jefferson with a population of 558,928.

There were 306 places in Alabama incorporated as cities or towns and 27 unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more. The 230 incorporated places of fewer than 2,500 inhabitants accounted for 182,344 of the 1,410,553 persons living in incorporated places. There were 61,672 persons living in the unincorporated places, 28,216 of whom were in the 18 places of fewer than 2,500 inhabitants. The incorporated places ranged in size from Stroud town with a population of 79 to Birmingham city with a population of 326,037.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, the urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. The remaining population is classified as rural. According to the urban definition used in previous censuses, the urban population comprised all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the 1950 definition. (Of course, the incorporated places of 2,500 or more are urban in their own right.) Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

According to the new urban definition, the 1950 urban population of Alabama consisted of the following components: (1) The 1,228,209 inhabitants of the 76 incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more; (2) the 33,456 inhabitants of the 9 specially delineated unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more; and (3) 79,272 persons living in other territory in the urban-fringe areas of Birmingham, Mobile, and Montgomery and the Alabama part of the urban fringe of Columbus, Ga. Since there were no places urban under special rule in Alabama according to the old definition, the population of the first element comprised the urban population under the old definition. The population of the remaining elements--112,728--represents the gain in the urban population of Alabama which resulted from the change in definition.

POPULATION OF ARIZONA: APRIL 1, 1950

The total population of Arizona on April 1, 1950, was 749,587, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 250,326, or 50.1 percent, over the 499,261 persons enumerated in 1940. The rate of growth for the State was second only to that of California. Among the States and the District of Columbia, Arizona ranked thirty-eighth in population. The 1950 population of Arizona was more than 77 times as large as its population in 1870 when it was first separately enumerated in a Federal census.

According to the new urban definition, Arizona had 415,108 persons living in urban territory and 334,479 persons in rural territory. The urban population amounted to 55.4 percent of the population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, 10 of the 14 counties in Arizona gained population. More than four-fifths of the population increase in the State was accounted for by Maricopa and Pima Counties, the largest counties in the State, which had increases of 145,577 and 68,378, respectively. The counties in Arizona ranged in size from Mohave with a population of 8,510 to Maricopa with a population of 331,770.

There were 45 places in Arizona incorporated as cities and towns and 17 unincorporated places. There were 303,462 persons living in the incorporated places, 30,560 of whom were in the 23 places with fewer than 2,500 inhabitants. There were 69,080 persons in the unincorporated places, 11,620 of whom were in the 7 places of 1,000 to 2,500 inhabitants. The incorporated places ranged in size from Winkelman town with a population of 548 to Phoenix city with a population of 106,818.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, the urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. The remaining population is classified as rural. According to the urban definition used in previous censuses, the urban population comprised all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the

Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the 1950 definition. (Of course, the incorporated places of 2,500 or more are urban in their own right.) Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

According to the new urban definition, the 1950 urban population of Arizona included the following components: (1) The 272,902 inhabitants of the 22 incorporated places of 2,500 or more; (2) the 57,460 inhabitants of the 10 specially delineated unincorporated places of 2,500 or more; and (3) the 84,746 persons living in unincorporated territory included in the urban fringe of Phoenix. Since there were no places urban under special rule in Arizona according to the old definition, the population of the first element comprises the urban population under the old definition. The population of the remaining elements--142,206--represents the gain in the urban population of Arizona which resulted from the change in definition.

POPULATION OF ARIZONA: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is one of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available.)

The total population of Arizona on April 1, 1950, was 749,587, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 250,326, or 50.1 percent, over the 499,261 persons enumerated in 1940. The rate of growth for the State was second only to that of California. Among the States and the District of Columbia, Arizona ranked thirty-eighth in population. The 1950 population of Arizona was more than 77 times as large as its population in 1870 when it was first separately enumerated in a Federal census.

According to the new urban definition, Arizona had 416,000 persons living in urban territory and 333,587 persons in rural territory. The urban population amounted to 55.5 percent of the population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, 10 of the 14 counties in Arizona gained population. More than four-fifths of the population increase in the State was accounted for by Maricopa and Pima Counties, the largest counties in the State, which had increases of 145,577 and 68,378, respectively. 1950 CENSUS OF POPULATIONADVANCE REPORTS

FOR RELEASE

July 25, 1951

Washington 25, D. C.

Series PC-8, No. 3

POPULATION OF ARKANSAS: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is one of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of Arkansas on April 1, 1950, was 1,909,511, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State decreased by 39,876, or 2.0 percent, from the 1,949,387 inhabitants enumerated in 1940. In 1950, Arkansas ranked thirtieth among the States in population. The 1950 population of Arkansas is about 19½ times as large as its population in 1840 when it was first enumerated as a State in a Federal census.

In 1950, according to the new urban definition, Arkansas had 630,591 persons living in urban territory and 1,278,920 in rural territory. The urban population constituted 33.0 percent of the total population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, 19 of the 75 counties in Arkansas had population increases and 56 lost population. Pulaski County led in both the amount and rate of increase, with a gain of 40,600, or 26.0 percent, for the decade. The counties in Arkansas ranged in size from Perry with a population of 5,978 to Pulaski with a population of 196,685.

Arkansas had 419 incorporated places and 9 unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more. These places ranged in size from several which had no population reported in 1950 to Little Rock city with a population of 102,213. There were 814,825 persons living in the incorporated places, 197,672 of whom were in the 357 places of fewer than 2,500 inhabitants. Of the 17,317 persons in the unincorporated places, 11,212 were living in the seven places of 1,000 to 2,500 inhabitants.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, the urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. The remaining population is classified as rural. According to the urban definition used in previous censuses, the urban population comprised all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the 1950 definition. (Of course, the incorporated places of 2,500 or more are urban in their own right.) Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

According to the new definition, the 1950 urban population of Arkansas included the following components: (1) 617,153 inhabitants of the 62 incorporated places of 2,500 or more; (2) the 6,105 inhabitants of the 2 unincorporated places of 2,500 or more; and (3) the 7,333 persons living in the 1 incorporated place under 2,500 and in the unincorporated territory included in the urban fringes of Little Rock-North Little Rock and Fort Smith.

Since there were no places urban under special rule according to the old definition, the first element comprises the urban population under the old definition. The population of the remaining elements--13,438--represents the gain in the urban population which resulted from the change in definition.

POPULATION OF CALIFORNIA: APRIL 1, 1950

The total population of California on April 1, 1950, was 10,586,228, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 3,678,836, or 53.3 percent, over the 6,907,387 inhabitants enumerated in 1940. Among the States, California ranked second in population. California led the other States in both the amount and rate of increase. The 1950 population was almost 28 times as great as the population in 1860 when California was first enumerated as a State.

According to the new urban definition, California had an urban population of 8,539,420 and a rural population of 2,046,808. The urban population comprised 80.7 percent of the population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, all but 4 of the 58 counties in California increased in population. The most rapid rate of increase was experienced in Contra Costa County, which had nearly three times as many inhabitants in 1950 as in 1940. In two other counties--San Mateo and Solano--population more than doubled over the 10-year period. The largest numerical increase took place in Los Angeles County, which had an increase of 1,366,044, or more than one-third of the increase for the entire State. The counties in California ranged in size from Alpine with a population of 241 to Los Angeles with a population of 4,151,687.

There were 305 places in California incorporated as cities or towns and 124 unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more. The 95 incorporated places with fewer than 2,500 inhabitants accounted for 138,895 of the 7,191,394 persons living in incorporated places. Of the 388,281 persons living in unincorporated places, 131,812 were in 81 places of 1,000 to 2,500 inhabitants. The incorporated places in California ranged in size from Hornitos town with a population of 126 to Los Angeles city with a population of 1,970,358.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, the urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. The remaining population is classified as rural. According to the urban definition used in previous censuses, the urban population comprised all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the 1950 definition. (Of course, the incorporated places of 2,500 or more are urban in their own right.) Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

According to the new urban definition, the 1950 urban population of California included the following components: (1) The 7,052,499 inhabitants of the 210 incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more; (2) the 251,469 inhabitants of the 43 specially delineated unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more; and (3) the 1,235,452 persons living in other territory in the urban-fringe areas of Fresno, Los Angeles, Sacramento, San Bernardino, San Diego, San Francisco-Oakland, San Jose, and Stockton. There was one place in California that was classified as urban under special rule according to the old definition--Belvedere township, in Los Angeles County. The urban population under the old definition, therefore, consisted of the 7,052,499 inhabitants of the incorporated places of 2,500 or more and the 46,667 inhabitants of Belvedere township. All the inhabitants of Belvedere township were classified as urban under the new definition because the township is included in the urban fringe of Los Angeles. The difference between the urban population of California under the new and old definitions, therefore, is that under the new definition a total of 1,440,254 persons were classified as urban who under the old definition would have been included in the rural population.

1950 CENSUS OF POPULATION

ADVANCE REPORTS

FOR RELEASE

~~August 14, 1951~~

Washington 25, D. C.

Series PC-8, No. 5

AUG 26 1951

POPULATION OF COLORADO: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is one of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of Colorado on April 1, 1950, was 1,325,089, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 201,793, or 18.0 percent, over the 1,123,296 persons enumerated in 1940. Among the States, Colorado ranked thirty-fourth in population. The 1950 population of Colorado was nearly 39 times as large as the population of Colorado Territory in 1860 when the Territory was first enumerated separately in a Federal census.

According to the new urban definition, Colorado had 831,318 persons living in urban territory and 493,771 in rural territory. The urban population constituted 62.7 percent of the population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, 30 of the 63 counties in Colorado increased in population. Jefferson County experienced the most rapid rate of growth, 81.2 percent, and three other counties, Adams, Arapahoe, and Rio Blanco, had rates of growth in excess of 60.0 percent. More than three-fourths of the population gain of the State was accounted for by the counties comprising the Denver Standard Metropolitan Area, that is, Adams, Arapahoe, Denver, and Jefferson. The counties ranged in size from Hinsdale with a population of 263 to Denver with a population of 415,786.

There were 252 places incorporated as cities and towns in Colorado and 11 unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more. There were 891,389 persons living in the incorporated places, 131,450 of whom were in the 216 places with fewer than 2,500 inhabitants. Of the 21,843 persons living in the unincorporated places, 8,735 were in the seven places of 1,000 to 2,500 inhabitants. The incorporated places ranged in size from Ophir town with a population of 2 to Denver city with a population of 415,786.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, the urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. The remaining population is classified as rural. According to the urban definition used in previous censuses, the urban population comprised all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the 1950 definition. (Of course, the incorporated places of 2,500 or more are urban in their own right.) Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

According to the new urban definition, the urban population of Colorado consisted of the following components: (1) The 759,939 inhabitants of the 36 incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more; (2) the 13,108 inhabitants of the 4 specially delineated unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more; and (3) the 58,271 persons living in the urban-fringe areas of Denver and Pueblo outside of incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more. Since there were no places urban under special rule in Colorado according to the old definition; the population of the first element comprised the urban population under the old definition. The population of the remaining elements--71,379--represents the gain in the urban population which resulted from the change in definition.

1950 CENSUS OF POPULATION

ADVANCE REPORTS

FOR RELEASE

August 12, 1951

Washington 25, D. C.

Series PC-8, No. 6

POPULATION OF CONNECTICUT: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is one of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of Connecticut on April 1, 1950, was 2,007,280, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 298,038, or 17.4 percent, over the 1,709,242 persons enumerated in 1940. Among the States, Connecticut ranked twenty-eighth in population. The 1950 population of Connecticut is more than eight times as large as its population in 1790, when it was enumerated in the first Federal census.

According to the new urban definition, Connecticut had 1,558,642 persons living in urban territory and 448,638 persons living in rural territory. The urban population comprised 77.6 percent of the population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, all of the eight counties in Connecticut increased in population. The rates of increase ranged from 9.8 percent in Windham County to 40.3 percent in Tolland County. The largest numerical increase was experienced in Hartford County, which had a gain of 89,472. The counties in Connecticut ranged in size from Tolland with a population of 44,709 to New Haven with a population of 545,784.

There were 34 places in Connecticut incorporated as cities and boroughs and 52 unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more. Of the 1,153,217 persons living in the incorporated places, 6,173 were in the six places with fewer than 2,500 inhabitants. There were 122,636 persons living in the unincorporated places, 63,946 of whom were in the 39 places with fewer than 2,500 inhabitants. The incorporated places ranged in size from Fenwick borough with a population of 16 to Hartford city with a population of 177,397.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, the urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. The remaining population is classified as rural. According to the urban definition used in previous censuses, the urban population comprised all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the 1950 definition. (Of course, the incorporated places of 2,500 or more are urban in their own right.) Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

According to the new urban definition, the 1950 urban population of Connecticut consisted of the following components: (1) The 1,147,044 inhabitants of the 28 incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more; (2) the 58,690 inhabitants of the 13 specially delineated unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more; and (3) 352,908 persons living in other territory in the urban-fringe areas of Bridgeport, Hartford, New Britain-Bristol, New Haven, Stamford-Norwalk, and Waterbury. Connecticut had four towns (East Hartford, Stratford, West Hartford, and West Haven) urban under special rule according to the old definition. The 1950 urban population under the old definition, therefore, consisted of the 1,147,044 inhabitants of the 28 incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and the 139,773 inhabitants of the 4 places urban under special rule. According to the new urban definition, 129,500 of the inhabitants of the four places urban under special rule were urban because they were living in urban-fringe areas and the remaining 10,273 were included in the rural population. On the other hand, the new urban definition included in the urban population the 58,690 inhabitants of the unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and 223,408 persons in other territory in the urban-fringe areas outside the four places urban under special rule who would have been included in the rural population under the old definition. The net gain in the urban population, therefore, which resulted from the change in definition is 271,825.

1950 CENSUS OF POPULATIONADVANCE REPORTS

March 2, 1951

Washington 25, D. C.

Series PC-8, No. 7

POPULATION OF DELAWARE: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is the second of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of Delaware on April 1, 1950, was 318,085, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the past 10 years, the population of the State increased by 51,580, or 19.4 percent, over the 266,505 inhabitants enumerated in 1940. Among the States and the District of Columbia, Delaware ranked 47th in population. The present population of Delaware is more than five times as large as its population 160 years ago when it was first enumerated in a Federal census.

According to the new urban definition, Delaware had an urban population of 199,122 and a rural population of 118,963. The urban population comprised 62.6 percent of the total population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, all three counties in Delaware gained population. New Castle County, the largest county in the State, led in both the amount of increase and the rate of growth. The smallest county in the State, Kent County, had the smallest numerical increase and rate of growth.

Delaware had a total of 50 incorporated places ranging in size from Slaughter Beach town with a population of 85 to Wilmington city with a population of 110,356. The population living in the incorporated places amounted to 56.1 percent of the population of the State. Nine of the incorporated places in Delaware had 2,500 inhabitants or more and an aggregate population of 147,890.

To permit a more realistic classification of the population by urban and rural residence, the Bureau of the Census adopted a new urban definition for use in the 1950 Census. According to this definition, the urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, incorporated or unincorporated, around cities of 50,000 or more; (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside of any urban fringe; and (d) incorporated towns of 2,500 inhabitants or more except in New England, New York, and Wisconsin, where "towns" are simply minor civil divisions of counties. The remaining population is classified as rural.

According to the old definition, the urban population comprised all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and in areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In order to apply the new urban definition, the Bureau of the Census has defined boundaries for unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more. Only those with a population of 2,500 or more have been defined as urban. The Bureau has also delineated arbitrary boundaries for the thickly settled fringe around cities of 50,000 or more.

There were no unincorporated places identified in Delaware and no areas urban under special rule according to the old definition. The difference in the distribution of the population of Delaware by urban and rural residence under the new and old definitions, therefore, is that the new definition classifies as urban 51,232 persons living in the urban fringe of the Wilmington urbanized area who would have been included in the rural population under the old definition.

FOR RELEASE

Series PC-8, No. 8

POPULATION OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

APRIL 1, 1950

(This is one of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of the District of Columbia on April 1, 1950, was 802,178, according to final figures released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the District increased by 139,087, or 21.0 percent, over the 663,091 persons enumerated in 1940. The District ranked higher in population than 13 of the States.

As in all previous censuses since that of 1890, the entire population of the District was classified as urban.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, urban territory has been defined to comprise (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. All other territory is classified as rural. According to the definition used in previous censuses, urban territory was designated as all incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the new definition. Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

The change in the urban definition had no effect on the distribution of the population of the District by urban and rural residence. Since Washington, D. C., is considered coextensive with the District, the population of the District is classified as urban under both definitions by virtue of residence in an incorporated place of 2,500 inhabitants or more.

1950 CENSUS OF POPULATIONADVANCE REPORTS

FOR RELEASE

September 20, 1951

Washington 25, D. C.

Series PC-8, No. 9

POPULATION OF FLORIDA: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is one of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of Florida on April 1, 1950, was 2,771,305, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 873,891, or 46.1 percent, over the 1,897,414 inhabitants enumerated in 1940. Among the States, Florida ranked twentieth in population. The 1950 population of Florida was about 80 times as large as its population in 1830, the first year in which the present area of the State was enumerated in a Federal census.

According to the new urban definition, Florida had 1,813,890 persons living in urban territory and 957,415 in rural territory. The urban population comprised 65.5 percent of the population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, 49 of the 67 counties in Florida increased in population. More than one-fourth of the population gain for the State was accounted for by Dade County, which had an increase of 227,345. Three counties--Duval, Hillsborough, and Pinellas--accounted for another fourth of the gain. The population of five counties--Bay, Broward, Clay, Monroe, and Okaloosa--more than doubled over the 10-year period. The counties in Florida ranged in size from Glades with a population of 2,199 to Dade with a population of 495,084.

There were 305 places in Florida incorporated as cities, towns, or villages and 30 unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more. There were 1,734,340 persons living in the incorporated places, 167,552 of whom were in the 211 places of fewer than 2,500 inhabitants. Of the 80,367 persons living in the unincorporated places, 38,614 were in the 26 places of 1,000 to 2,500 inhabitants. The incorporated places ranged in size from two (Mecca and Monte Vista) which had no population reported in 1950 to Miami city with a population of 249,276.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, the urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. The remaining population is classified as rural. According to the urban definition used in previous censuses, the urban population comprised all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the 1950 definition. (Of course, the incorporated places of 2,500 or more are urban in their own right.) Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

According to the new urban definition, the 1950 urban population of Florida consisted of the following components: (1) The 1,566,788 inhabitants of the 94 incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more; (2) the 41,753 inhabitants of the 4 specially delineated unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more; and (3) the 205,349 persons living in other territory included in the urban-fringe areas of Jacksonville, Miami, Orlando, St. Petersburg, and Tampa. Since there were no places urban under special rule in Florida according to the old definition, the first element comprised the urban population under the old definition. The population of the remaining elements--247,102--represents the gain in the urban population of Florida which resulted from the change in definition.

1950 CENSUS OF POPULATIONADVANCE REPORTS

FOR RELEASE

September 27, 1951

Washington 25, D. C.

Series PC-8, No. 10

POPULATION OF GEORGIA: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is one of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of Georgia on April 1, 1950, was 3,444,578, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 320,855, or 10.3 percent, over the 3,123,723 inhabitants enumerated in 1940. Among the States, Georgia ranked thirteenth in population. The 1950 population was about 42 times as large as the population in 1790 when it was enumerated in the first Federal census.

According to the new urban definition, Georgia had 1,559,447 persons living in urban territory and 1,885,131 in rural territory. The urban population amounted to 45.3 percent of the population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, 61 of the 159 counties in Georgia increased in population. The most rapid rate of growth was experienced in Clayton County, which gained at the rate of 96.2 percent. The largest numerical increase was experienced in Fulton County, which had an increase of 80,686. Six additional counties--Bibb, Chatham, Cobb, De Kalb, Muscogee, and Richmond--had increases in excess of 20,000. The combined gain of these seven counties accounted for nearly nine-tenths of the population gain for the State. The counties in Georgia ranged in size from Echols with a population of 2,494 to Fulton with a population of 473,572.

There were 584 places in Georgia in 1950 incorporated as cities, towns, or villages and 27 unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more. The 484 incorporated places of fewer than 2,500 inhabitants accounted for 284,217 of the 1,643,992 persons living in incorporated places.

Of the 62,965 persons in unincorporated places, 30,631 were in the 21 places of fewer than 2,500 inhabitants. The incorporated places ranged in size from Mountain Park city with a population of 15 to Atlanta city with a population of 331,314.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, the urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. The remaining population is classified as rural. According to the urban definition used in previous censuses, the urban population comprised all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the 1950 definition. (Of course, the incorporated places of 2,500 or more are urban in their own right.) Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

According to the new urban definition, the 1950 urban population of Georgia consisted of the following components: (1) The 1,359,775 inhabitants of the 100 incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more; (2) the 32,334 inhabitants of the 6 specially delineated unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more; and (3) 167,338 persons living in other territory included in the urban-fringe areas of Atlanta, Macon, and Savannah and the Georgia parts of the urban-fringe areas of Augusta, Columbus, and Chattanooga, Tenn. Under the old urban definition, district 1511, Center Hill, in Fulton County, was urban under special rule. The urban population under the old definition consisted of the 1,359,775 persons living in the incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and the 22,093 persons living in district 1511. According to the new urban definition, 17,460 of the inhabitants of district 1511 were classified as urban because they were living in the urban fringe of Atlanta and the remaining 4,633 were included in the rural population. On the other hand, the 32,334 inhabitants of the six specially delineated unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and 149,878 of the persons in other territory in the urban-fringe areas were included in the rural population under the old definition. The net gain in the urban population of Georgia, which resulted from the change in definition, therefore, was 177,579.

1950 CENSUS OF POPULATION

ADVANCE REPORTS

FOR RELEASE

August 1, 1951

Washington 25, D. C.

Series PC-8, No. 11

POPULATION OF IDAHO: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is one of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of Idaho on April 1, 1950, was 588,637, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 63,674, or 12.1 percent, over the 524,873 inhabitants enumerated in 1940. Among the States and the District of Columbia, Idaho ranked forty-fourth in population. The 1950 population of the State was 39 times as large as the population of Idaho Territory in 1870, the first year in which the Territory was separately enumerated in a Federal census.

According to the new urban definition, Idaho had 252,549 persons living in urban territory and 336,088 persons in rural territory. The urban population accounted for 42.9 percent of the population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, 22 of the 44 counties in Idaho increased in population. More than three-fifths of the gain for the State was accounted for by Ada, Bannock, and Canyon Counties, the largest counties in the State. The counties in Idaho ranged in size from Clark with a population of 918 to Ada with a population of 70,649.

There were 188 places in Idaho incorporated as cities, towns, or villages and 6 unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more. There were 322,139 persons living in the incorporated places, 88,001 of whom were in the 159 places of fewer than 2,500 inhabitants. The unincorporated places had a combined population of 20,797, 2,386 of whom were in the two places of between 1,000 to 2,500 inhabitants. The incorporated places ranged in size from Eddville village with a population of 10 to Boise City with a population of 34,393.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, the urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. The remaining population is classified as rural. According to the urban definition used in previous censuses, the urban population comprised all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the

Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the 1950 definition. (Of course, the incorporated places of 2,500 or more are urban in their own right.) Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

As there were no urban-fringe areas in Idaho, the 1950 urban population of Idaho under the new definition consisted of the 234,138 inhabitants of the 29 incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and the 18,411 inhabitants of the 4 specially delineated unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more. Since there were no places urban under special rule in Idaho, the population of the incorporated places of 2,500 or more comprised the urban population under the old definition. The effect of the change in the urban definition, therefore, is that the new definition classifies as urban the 18,411 inhabitants of the four unincorporated places of 2,500 or more who would have been included in the rural population under the old definition.

1950 CENSUS OF POPULATION

ADVANCE REPORTS

FOR RELEASE

October 18, 1951

Washington 25, D. C.

Series PC-8, No. 12

POPULATION OF ILLINOIS: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is one of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of Illinois on April 1, 1950, was 8,712,176, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 814,935, or 10.3 percent, over the 7,897,241 inhabitants enumerated in 1940. Among the States, Illinois ranked fourth in population. The 1950 population of Illinois was about 158 times as large as its population in 1820 when it was first enumerated as a State.

According to the new urban definition, Illinois had 6,759,271 persons living in urban territory and 1,952,905 persons in rural territory. The urban population accounted for 77.6 percent of the population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, 46 of the 103 counties in Illinois increased in population. More than one-half of the population increase for the State was concentrated in Cook County, which had a gain of 445,450. The counties in Illinois ranged in size from Putnam with a population of 4,746 to Cook with a population of 4,508,792.

In 1950 there were 1,157 places in Illinois incorporated as cities, towns, or villages and 33 unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more. Of the 7,147,066 inhabitants of the incorporated places, 660,393 were living in the 912 places with fewer than 2,500 inhabitants. The 20 unincorporated places of 1,000 to 2,500 inhabitants had 30,206 of the 81,918 inhabitants of the unincorporated places. The incorporated places in Illinois ranged in size from Torino village with a population of 9 to Chicago city with a population of 3,620,962.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, the urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. The remaining population is classified as rural. According to the urban definition used in previous censuses, the urban population comprised all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the 1950 definition. (Of course, the incorporated places of 2,500 or more are urban in their own right.) Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

According to the new urban definition, the 1950 urban population of Illinois included the following components: (1) The 6,486,673 inhabitants of the 245 incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more; (2) the 51,712 inhabitants of the 13 specially delineated unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more; and (3) 220,886 persons living in other territory in the urban-fringe areas of Decatur, Peoria, Rockford, and Springfield and in the Illinois parts of the urban-fringe areas of Chicago, Davenport (Iowa)--Rock Island--Moline (Ill.), and St. Louis, Mo. Since there were no places in Illinois classified as urban under special rule according to the old definition, the population of the first element comprised the urban population under the old definition. The population of the remaining elements--272,598--represents the gain in the urban population of Illinois which resulted from the change in definition.

1950 CENSUS OF POPULATIONADVANCE REPORTS

FOR RELEASE

September 14, 1951

Washington 25, D. C.

Series PC-8, No. 13

Revised copy follows this copy

POPULATION OF INDIANA: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is one of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of Indiana on April 1, 1950, was 3,934,224, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 506,428, or 14.8 percent, over the 3,427,796 inhabitants enumerated in 1940. Among the States, Indiana ranked twelfth in population. The 1950 population was almost 27 times as large as its population in 1820 when it was first enumerated as a State.

According to the new urban definition, Indiana had 2,357,196 persons living in urban territory and 1,577,028 persons in rural territory. The urban population amounted to 59.9 percent of the total population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, 74 of the 92 counties in Indiana gained population and 18 lost population. Almost one-half of the population increase in the State was accounted for by Marion, Lake, St. Joseph, and Vanderburgh Counties; four of the most populous counties in the State. Clark experienced the greatest rate of increase, 55.8 percent. The counties of Indiana ranged in size from Ohio with a population of 4,228 to Marion with a population of 551,777.

In 1950 Indiana had a total of 537 incorporated places and 12 unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more. The incorporated places ranged in size from Shores Acres town with a population of 9 to Indianapolis city with a population of 427,173. There were 2,534,710 persons living in the incorporated places, 317,242 of whom were in the 421 places of fewer than 2,500 inhabitants. Of the 24,979 persons in the unincorporated places, 14,216 were living in the 9 places of 1,000 to 2,500 inhabitants.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, the urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. The remaining population is classified as rural. According to the urban definition used in previous censuses, the urban population comprised all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the 1950 definition. (Of course, the incorporated places of 2,500 or more are urban in their own right.) Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

According to the new urban definition, the 1950 urban population of Indiana included the following components: (1) The 2,217,468 inhabitants of the 116 incorporated places of 2,500 or more; (2) the 10,763 inhabitants of the 3 specially delineated unincorporated places of 2,500 or more; and (3) the 128,965 persons living in other territory included in the urban-fringe areas of Evansville, Terre Haute, Fort Wayne, Indianapolis, and in the Indiana parts of the urban-fringe areas of Chicago, Ill.; Louisville, Ky.; and South Bend, Ind. Since there were no places urban under special rule in Indiana according to the old definition, the population of the first element comprised the urban population under the old definition. The population of the remaining elements--139,728--represents the gain in the urban population of Indiana which resulted from the change in definition.

POPULATION OF INDIANA: APRIL 1, 1950

The total population of Indiana on April 1, 1950, was 3,934,224, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 506,428, or 14.8 percent, over the 3,427,796 inhabitants enumerated in 1940. Among the States, Indiana ranked twelfth in population. The 1950 population was almost 27 times as large as its population in 1820 when it was first enumerated as a State.

According to the new urban definition, Indiana had 2,357,196 persons living in urban territory and 1,577,028 persons in rural territory. The urban population amounted to 59.9 percent of the total population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, 74 of the 92 counties in Indiana gained population and 18 lost population. Almost one-half of the population increase in the State was accounted for by Marion, Lake, St. Joseph, and Vanderburgh Counties, four of the most populous counties in the State. Clark experienced the greatest rate of increase, 55.8 percent. The counties of Indiana ranged in size from Ohio with a population of 4,223 to Marion with a population of 551,777.

In 1950 Indiana had a total of 537 incorporated places and 12 unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more. The incorporated places ranged in size from Shores Acres town with a population of 9 to Indianapolis city with a population of 427,173. There were 2,534,710 persons living in the incorporated places, 317,242 of whom were in the 421 places of fewer than 2,500 inhabitants. Of the 24,979 persons in the unincorporated places, 14,216 were living in the 9 places of 1,000 to 2,500 inhabitants.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, the urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. The remaining population is classified as rural. According to the urban definition used in previous censuses, the urban population comprised all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the 1950 definition. (Of course, the incorporated places of 2,500 or more are urban in their own right.) Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

According to the new urban definition, the 1950 urban population of Indiana included the following components: (1) The 2,217,468 inhabitants of the 116 incorporated places of 2,500 or more; (2) the 10,763 inhabitants of the 3 specially delineated unincorporated places of 2,500 or more; and (3) the 128,965 persons living in other territory included in the urban-fringe areas of Evansville, Terre Haute, Fort Wayne, Indianapolis, and in the Indiana parts of the urban-fringe areas of Chicago, Ill.; Louisville, Ky.; and South Bend, Ind. Since there were no places urban under special rule in Indiana according to the old definition, the population of the first element comprised the urban population under the old definition. The population of the remaining elements--139,728--represents the gain in the urban population of Indiana which resulted from the change in definition.

POPULATION OF IOWA: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is one of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of Iowa on April 1, 1950, was 2,621,073, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 82,805, or 3.3 percent, over the 2,538,268 persons enumerated in 1940. Among the States, Iowa ranked twenty-second in population. The 1950 population of Iowa was more than 13 times as large as its population in 1850, the first year in which it was enumerated as a State in a Federal census.

According to the new urban definition, Iowa had 1,250,938 persons living in urban territory and 1,370,135 in rural territory. The urban population comprised 47.7 percent of the population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, 32 of the 99 counties in Iowa increased in population. More than one-third of the population increase in the State was accounted for by Polk County. The most rapid rate of increase was experienced by Johnson County. The counties in Iowa ranged in size from Adams with a population of 8,753 to Polk with a population of 226,010.

There were 934 places incorporated as cities and towns in Iowa in 1950. There were 1,697,980 persons living in the incorporated places, 468,547 of whom were in the 841 places under 2,500 inhabitants. The incorporated places ranged in size from Donnan town with a population of 36 to Des Moines city with a population of 177,965. The Bureau of the Census did not delineate any unincorporated places in the State.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, the urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. The remaining population is classified as rural. According to the urban definition used in previous censuses, the urban population comprised all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the 1950 definition. (Of course, the incorporated places of 2,500 or more are urban in their own right.) Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

According to the new urban definition, the urban population of Iowa consisted of the 1,229,433 inhabitants of the 93 incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and the 21,505 persons living outside of incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more in the urban fringes of Cedar Rapids, Des Moines, and Waterloo and the Iowa parts of the urban fringes of Davenport (Iowa)--Rock Island--Moline (Ill.), Omaha, Nebr., and Sioux City, Iowa. As there were no places urban under special rule in Iowa according to the old definition, the population of the first element comprised the urban population according to the old definition. The population of the other element--21,505--represents the gain in the urban population which resulted from the change in definition.
