POPULATION OF TEXAS, BY COUNTIES

APRIL 1, 1950

Final population figures from the 1950 Census of Population for counties in Texas were released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. The figures shown in the table below supersede those which appear in Series PC-2, No. 43 Rev., and Series PC-3, No. 4. Final population figures for minor civil divisions, all incorporated places, and unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more in the State will appear in a forthcoming report, Series PC-8, No. 42.

1950 CENSUS OF POPULATIONADVANCE REPORTS

FOR RELEASE

October 25, 1951

Washington 25, D. C.

Series PC-8, No. 42

POPULATION OF TEXAS: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is the final report of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State)

The total population of Texas on April 1, 1950, was 7,711,194, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 1,296,370, or 20.2 percent, over the 6,414,824 inhabitants enumerated in 1940. Among the States, Texas ranked sixth in population. The 1950 population of Texas was more than 36 times its population in 1850 when it was first enumerated in a Federal census.

According to the new urban definition, Texas had an urban population of 4,838,060 and a rural population of 2,873,134. The urban population accounted for 62.7 percent of the population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, 108 of the 254 counties in Texas increased in population. The most rapid rate of increase was experienced in Andrews County, in which the 1950 population was nearly four times as large as the population in 1940. In four additional counties--Ector, Midland, Moore, and Orange--the population more than doubled over the 10-year period. The largest numerical increase took place in Harris County, which had an increase of 277,740. Dallas, Bexar, and Tarrant, the other counties with increases in excess of 100,000, had increases of 216,235, 162,284, and 135,732, respectively. These four counties accounted for more than three-fifths of the population gain of the entire State. The counties in Texas ranged in size from Kenedy with a population of 632 to Harris with a population of 806,701.

In 1950 there were 719 places in Texas incorporated as cities, towns, or villages and 47 unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more. Of the 5,080,431 inhabitants of the incorporated places 467,765 were living in the 461 places of fewer than 2,500 inhabitants. There were 105,869 persons living in the unincorporated places, 51,105 of whom were in the 33 places of 1,000 to 2,500 inhabitants. The incorporated places in Texas ranged in size from Belcherville town with a population of 31 to Houston city with a population of 596,163.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, the urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. The remaining population is classified as rural. According to the urban definition used in previous censuses, the urban population comprised all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the 1950 definition. (Of course, the incorporated places of 2,500 or more are urban in their own right.) Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

According to the new urban definition, the 1950 urban population of Texas included the following components: (1) The 4,612,666 inhabitants of the 258 incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more; (2) the 54,764 inhabitants of the 14 specially delineated unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more; and (3) 170,630 persons living in other territory in the urban-fringe areas of Amarillo, Austin, Beaumont, Corpus Christi, Dallas, El Paso, Fort Worth, Galveston, Houston, Port Arthur, San Antonio, and Waco. Since there were no places in Texas classified as urban under special rule according to the old definition, the population of the first element constituted the urban population under the old definition. The population of the remaining elements--225,394--represents the gain in the urban population of Texas which resulted from the change in definition.

FOR RELEASE

June 17, 1951

Washington 25, D. C.

Series PC-8, No. 43

POPULATION OF UTAH: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is one of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of Utah on April 1, 1950, was 688,862, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 138,552, or 25.2 percent, over the 550,310 inhabitants enumerated in 1940. Among the States and the District of Columbia, Utah ranked thirty-ninth in population. The present population of Utah is about 61 times as large as its population 100 years ago when the Territory of Utah was first separately enumerated in a Federal census.

According to the new urban definition, Utah had 449,855 persons living in urban territory and 239,007 in rural territory. The urban population comprised 65.3 percent of the total population of the State. The trends in the urban and rural population can be examined only on the basis of the old definition. On that basis, the urban population increased by 107,025, or 35.0 percent, between 1940 and 1950, whereas the gain in the rural population was 31,527, or 12.9 percent. The numerical increase in the urban population was larger than any previous intercensal gain in the total population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, 12 of Utah's 29 counties gained population and 17 lost population. Of the counties which gained population, only one had no urban population. Of the counties which lost population, only three had some urban population. Salt Lake County had the largest numerical increase, whereas the most rapid rate of growth was experienced by Davis County, which had an increase of 95.6 percent. The counties in Utah ranged in size from Daggett with a population of 364 to Salt Lake with a population of 274,895.

Utah had a total of 209 incorporated places and 6 unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more. These places ranged in size from Mercur city with a population of 2 to Salt Lake City with a population of 182,121. The population living in incorporated and unincorporated places amounted to 551,847, or 80.1 percent of the total population of the State. There were 412,518 persons living in the 30 incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more, and 12,796 in the 3 unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more. Of the 182 places under 2,500, the 179 incorporated places had an aggregate population of 120,982 and the 3 unincorporated places had a combined population of 5,551.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. The remaining population is classified as rural. According to the definition used in previous censuses, urban population comprises all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the new definition. Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

According to the new definition, the 1950 urban population of Utah included the following components: (1) The 412,518 inhabitants of the 30 incorporated places of 2,500 or more; (2) the 12,796 inhabitants of the 3 unincorporated places of 2,500 or more; and (3) the 24,541 persons living in the unincorporated territory and in the 1 incorporated place under 2,500 in the urban fringe of Salt Lake City. Since the first element comprises the urban population under the old definition, the aggregate population of the remaining elements--37,337--represents the net gain in urban population which resulted from the change in definition.

FOR RELEASE

February 26, 1951

Washington 25, D. C.

Series PC-8, No. 44

Revised copy follows this copy

POPULATION OF VERMONT: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is the first of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of Vermont on April 1, 1950, was 377,747, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the past 10 years, the population of the State increased by 18,516, or 5.2 percent, over the 359,231 inhabitants enumerated in 1940. Among the States and the District of Columbia, Vermont ranked 46th in population. The present population of Vermont is about 4½ times as large as its population 160 years ago when it was first enumerated in a Federal census.

Vermont has always been a State with the preponderance of its population living in rural territory. In 1950, Vermont had an urban population of 137,612 and a rural population of 240,135. The urban population was larger than ever before but still comprised only 36.4 percent of the total population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, 9 of Vermont's 14 counties gained population and 5 lost population. Each of the counties which lost population was predominantly rural, no one of them having less than two-thirds of its population living in rural territory. Chittenden and Washington Counties, the only counties in the State with more than half their population living in urban territory, had population increases amounting to 20.1 percent and 3.2 percent, respectively. The counties of Vermont ranged in size from Grand Isle with a population of 3,406 to Chittenden with a population of 62,570.

Vermont had a total of 71 incorporated and 9 unincorporated places ranging in size from West Glover village with a population of 58 to Burlington city with a population of 33,155. The population living in incorporated and unincorporated places amounted to 52.5 percent of the total population of the State. Sixteen of the places in Vermont had 2,500 inhabitants or more and an aggregate population of 137,612; the remaining 64 places were smaller than 2,500 and had a combined population of 60,557. The 71 incorporated places alone contained 175,922 inhabitants, or 46.6 percent of the total population of the State. Of these 71 places, 15 had 2,500 or more inhabitants and a combined population of 128,006. Vermont had only 1 unincorporated place of 2,500 or more and 8 of from 1,000 to 2,500. The population in the unincorporated place of 2,500 or more--Brattleboro--was 9,606, and the combined population of the smaller unincorporated places was 12,641.

To permit a more realistic classification of the population by urban and rural residence, the Bureau of the Census adopted a new urban definition for use in the 1950 Census. According to this definition, the urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, incorporated or unincorporated, around cities of 50,000 or more; (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside of any urban fringe; and (d) incorporated towns of 2,500 inhabitants or more except in New England, New York, and Wisconsin, where "towns" are simply minor civil divisions of counties. The remaining population is classified as rural.

According to the old definition, the urban population comprised all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and in areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In order to apply the new urban definition, the Bureau of the Census has defined boundaries for unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more. Only those with a population of 2,500 or more have been defined as urban. The Bureau has also delineated arbitrary boundaries for the thickly settled fringe around cities of 50,000 or more.

Since there were no urban fringe areas in Vermont and since Brattleboro, the only unincorporated place which qualified as urban under the new definition, was also the only area which was urban under special rule according to the old definition, the distribution of the population of Vermont by urban or rural residence is the same according to either definition.

POPULATION OF VERMONT: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is the first of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of Vermont on April 1, 1950, was 377,747, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the past 10 years, the population of the State increased by 18,516, or 5.2 percent, over the 359,231 inhabitants enumerated in 1940. Among the States and the District of Columbia, Vermont ranked 46th in population. The present population of Vermont is about $4\frac{1}{2}$ times as large as its population 160 years ago when it was first enumerated in a Federal census.

Vermont has always been a State with the preponderance of its population living in rural territory. In 1950, Vermont had an urban population of 137,612 and a rural population of 240,135. The urban population was larger than ever before but still comprised only 36.4 percent of the total population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, 9 of Vermont's 14 counties gained population and 5 lost population. Each of the counties which lost population was predominantly rural, no one of them having less than two-thirds of its population living in rural territory. Chittenden and Washington Counties, the only counties in the State with more than half their population living in urban territory, had population increases amounting to 20.1 percent and 3.2 percent, respectively. The counties of Vermont ranged in size from Grand Isle with a population of 3,406 to Chittenden with a population of 62,570.

Vermont had a total of 71 incorporated and 9 unincorporated places ranging in size from West Glover village with a population of 58 to Burlington city with a population of 33,155. The population living in incorporated and unincorporated places amounted to 52.4 percent of the total population of the State. Sixteen of the places in Vermont had 2,500 inhabitants or more and an aggregate population of 137,612; the remaining 64 places were smaller than 2,500 and had a combined population of 60,466. The 71 incorporated places alone contained 175,831 inhabitants, or 46.5 percent of the total population of the State. Of these 71 places, 15 had 2,500 inhabitants or more and a combined population of 128,006. Vermont had only 1 unincorporated place of 2,500 or more and 8 of from 1,000 to 2,500. The population in the unincorporated place of 2,500 or more--Brattleboro--was 9,606, and the combined population of the smaller unincorporated places was 12,641.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, urban territory has been defined to comprise (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. All other territory is classified as rural. According to the urban definition used in previous censuses, urban territory was designated as all incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the new definition. Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

Since there were no urban-fringe areas in Vermont and since Brattleboro, the only unincorporated place which qualified as urban under the new definition, was also the only area which was urban under special rule according to the old definition, the distribution of the population of Vermont by urban or rural residence is the same according to either definition.

FOR RELEASE

August 12, 1951

Washington 25, D. C.

Series PC-2, No. 45

POPULATION OF VIRGINIA: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is one of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of Virginia on April 1, 1950, was 3,318,680, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 640,907, or 23.9 percent, over the 2,677,773 persons enumerated in 1940. Among the States, Virginia ranked fifteenth in population. The 1950 population was about five times as large as the population of the present area of Virginia 160 years ago, when it was enumerated in the first Federal census.

According to the new urban definition, Virginia had 1,560,115 persons living in urban territory and 1,758,565 in rural territory. The urban population accounted for 47.0 percent of the population of the State.

In 1950 there were 100 counties and 27 cities independent of the counties in Virginia. Of the 100 counties, 62 increased in population between 1940 and 1950. Five counties, Arlington, Fairfax, Norfolk, Princess Anne, and Warwick, more than doubled in population. Of the 27 independent cities, all but Clifton Forge had population gains. The most rapid rate of increase among the independent cities was experienced by Falls Church, which nearly tripled in population. The counties in Virginia ranged in size from Craig with a population of 3,452 to Arlington with a population of 135,449. The independent cities ranged in size from Buena Vista with a population of 5,214 to Richmond with a population of 230,310.

In 1950 there were 223 places in Virginia incorporated as cities and towns and 46 unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more. There were 1,330,005 persons living in the incorporated places, 129,510 of whom were in the 161 places of fewer than 2,500 inhabitants. Of the 134,350 inhabitants of the unincorporated places, 46,450 were in the 30 places of 1,000 to 2,500 inhabitants. The incorporated places other than independent cities ranged in size from McDowell town with a population of 107 to Pulaski town with a population of 9,202.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, the urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. The remaining population is classified as rural. According to the urban definition used in previous censuses, the urban population comprised all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the 1950 definition. (Of course, the incorporated places of 2,500 or more are urban in their own right.) Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

According to the new urban definition, the 1950 urban population of Virginia consisted of the following components: (1) The 1,200,495 inhabitants of the 62 incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more; (2) the 87,900 inhabitants of the 16 specially delineated unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more; and (3) the 271,720 persons living in the urban fringes of Norfolk, Portsmouth, Richmond, Roanoke, and the Virginia part of the urban fringe of Washington, D. C., in territory outside of incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more. Under the old definition, there was one place urban under special rule in Virginia, Arlington County. (The population of Arlington County is urban under the new definition because the entire county is in the urban fringe of Washington, D. C.) The urban population under the old definition, therefore, consisted of the population of the 62 incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and the 135,449 inhabitants of Arlington County, or 1,335,944. The net gain in the urban population resulting from the change in definition was 224,171.

1950 CENSUS OF POPULATION

ADVANCE REPORTS

FOR RELEASE

September 19, 1951

Washington 25, D. C.

Series PC-8, No. 46

POPULATION OF WASHINGTON: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is one of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of Washington on April 1, 1950, was 2,378,963, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 642,772, or 37.0 percent, over the 1,736,191 inhabitants enumerated in 1940. Among the States, Washington ranked twenty-third in population. The 1950 population was nearly 100 times as large as the population in 1870, when the present area of the State was first separately enumerated in a Federal census.

According to the new urban definition, Washington had 1,503,166 persons living in urban territory in 1950 and 875,797 in rural territory. The urban population comprised 63.2 percent of the total population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, 33 of the 39 counties in Washington increased in population. More than one-third of the population gain of the State was accounted for by King County, which had an increase of 228,012. The second and third most populous counties in the State--Pierce and Spokane--had gains in excess of 50,000. Benton County, the population of which more than quadrupled between 1940 and 1950, had the most rapid rate of growth of all the counties in the United States. The counties in Washington ranged in size from Garfield with a population of 3,204 to King with a population of 732,992.

There were 238 places incorporated as cities or towns in Washington in 1950 and 23 unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more. Of the 1,422,983 inhabitants of the incorporated places, 148,831 were in the 183 places of fewer than 2,500 inhabitants. There were 75,483 persons living in the 23 unincorporated places, 18,600 of whom were in the 12 places of 1,000 to 2,500 inhabitants. The incorporated places ranged in size from Hatton town with a population of 42 to Seattle city with a population of 467,591.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, the urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. The remaining population is classified as rural. According to the urban definition used in previous censuses, the urban population comprised all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the 1950 definition. (Of course, the incorporated places of 2,500 or more are urban in their own right.) Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

According to the new urban definition, the 1950 urban population of Washington included the following components: (1) The 1,274,152 inhabitants of the 55 incorporated places of 2,500 or more; (2) the 56,883 inhabitants of the 11 specially delineated unincorporated places of 2,500 or more; (3) the 172,131 persons living in other territory included in the urban-fringe areas of Seattle, Spokane, Tacoma, and the Washington part of the urban fringe of Portland, Oreg. Since there were no places urban under special rule in Washington according to the old definition, the population of the first element comprised the population under the old definition. The population of the remaining elements-- 229,014--represents the gain in urban population due to the change in definition.

FOR RELEASE

April 23, 1951

Washington 25, D. C.

Series PC-8, No. 47

Revised copy follows this copy

POPULATION OF WEST VIRGINIA: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is the fifth of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of West Virginia on April 1, 1950, was 2,005,552, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 103,578, or 5.4 percent, over the 1,901,974 inhabitants enumerated in 1940. Among the States, West Virginia ranked twenty-ninth in population. The present population of West Virginia is about $4\frac{1}{2}$ times as large as its population 80 years ago when it was first separately enumerated in a Federal census.

West Virginia has always been a State with the preponderance of its population living in rural territory. According to the new urban definition, West Virginia had an urban population of 698,324 and a rural population of 1,307,228. The urban population comprised 34.8 percent of the total population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, 27 of West Virginia's 55 counties gained population and 28 lost population. Of the counties which lost population, all but 2 were predominantly rural, and 19 had no urban population at all. The counties of West Virginia ranged in size from Wirt with a population of 5,119 to Kanawha with a population of 239,629.

West Virginia had a total of 214 incorporated places and 77 unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more. These places ranged in size from Montrose town with a population of 79 to Huntington city with a population of 86,353. The 214 incorporated places contained 802,827 inhabitants, or 40.0 percent of the total population of the State. Of these places, 55 had 2,500 inhabitants or more and a combined population of 644,443. The population of the 7 unincorporated places of 2,500 or more was 29,506, and the combined population of the 70 smaller unincorporated places was 103,154.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, urban territory has been defined to comprise (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. All other territory is classified as rural. According to the definition used in previous censuses, urban territory was designated as all incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the new definition. Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

According to the new urban definition, the 1950 urban population of West Virginia included the following components: (1) The 644,443 inhabitants of the 55 incorporated places of 2,500 or more; (2) the 29,506 inhabitants of the 7 specially delineated unincorporated places of 2,500 or more; (3) the 24,375 persons living in the incorporated places under 2,500 and unincorporated territory in the urban fringes of Charleston, Wheeling, and Huntington. Since the first element comprises the urban population under the old urban definition, the aggregate population of the remaining elements--53,881--represents the net gain in the West Virginia urban population which resulted from the change in definition.

FOR RELEASE

POPULATION OF WEST VIRGINIA: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is one of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of West Virginia on April 1, 1950, was 2,005,552, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 103,578, or 5.4 percent, over the 1,901,974 inhabitants enumerated in 1940. Among the States, West Virginia ranked twenty-ninth in population. The present population of West Virginia is about 36 times as large as its population 160 years ago when the territory which now comprises the State was first enumerated in a Federal census.

West Virginia has always been a State with the preponderance of its population living in rural territory. According to the new urban definition, West Virginia had an urban population of 694,487 and a rural population of 1,311,065. The urban population comprised 34.6 percent of the total population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, 27 of West Virginia's 55 counties gained population and 28 lost population. Of the counties which lost population, all but 2 were predominantly rural, and 19 had no urban population at all. The counties of West Virginia ranged in size from Wirt with a population of 5,119 to Kanawha with a population of 239,629.

West Virginia had a total of 214 incorporated places and 77 unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more. These places ranged in size from Montrose town with a population of 79 to Huntington city with a population of 86,353. The 214 incorporated places contained 800,991 inhabitants, or 39.9 percent of the total population of the State. Of these places, 54 had 2,500 inhabitants or more and a combined population of 640,606. The population of the 7 unincorporated places of 2,500 or more was 29,506, and the combined population of the 70 smaller unincorporated places was 103,154.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. The remaining population is classified as rural. According to the definition used in previous censuses, urban population comprises all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the new definition. Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

According to the new urban definition, the 1950 urban population of West Virginia included the following components: (1) The 640,606 inhabitants of the 54 incorporated places of 2,500 or more; (2) the 29,506 inhabitants of the 7 specially delineated unincorporated places of 2,500 or more; (3) the 24,375 persons living in the incorporated places under 2,500 and unincorporated territory in the urban fringes of Charleston, Wheeling, and Huntington. Since the first element comprises the urban population under the old urban definition, the aggregate population of the remaining elements--53,881--represents the net gain in the West Virginia urban population which resulted from the change in definition.

FOR RELEASE

~~August 17, 1951~~

Washington 25, D. C.

Series PC-8, No. 48

AUG 26 1951

POPULATION OF WISCONSIN: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is one of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of Wisconsin on April 1, 1950, was 3,434,575, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 296,988, or 9.5 percent, over the 3,137,587 persons enumerated in 1940. Among the States, Wisconsin ranked fourteenth in population. The 1950 population of Wisconsin was more than 11 times as large as its population in 1850 when it was first enumerated as a State in a Federal census.

According to the new urban definition, Wisconsin had 1,987,888 persons living in urban territory and 1,446,687 in rural territory. The urban population comprised 57.9 percent of the population of the State.

Between 1940 and 1950, 37 of the 71 counties gained population. The most rapid rate of increase was experienced in Waukesha County, which gained at a rate of 36.9 percent. More than one-third of the population gain of the State was accounted for by Milwaukee County, which had an increase of 104,162. Eight additional counties had increases of 10,000 or more. The counties in Wisconsin ranged in size from Florence with a population of 3,756 to Milwaukee with a population of 871,047.

There were 529 places in Wisconsin incorporated as cities or villages and 20 unincorporated places of 1,000 inhabitants or more. There were 2,225,618 persons living in the incorporated places, 319,255 of whom were in the 424 places with fewer than 2,500 inhabitants. Of the 38,089 inhabitants of the unincorporated places, 22,911 were in the 16 places of 1,000 to 2,500 inhabitants. The incorporated places ranged in size from Glen Flora village with a population of 91 to Milwaukee city with a population of 637,392.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, the urban population comprises all persons living in (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. The remaining population is classified as rural. According to the urban definition used in previous censuses, the urban population comprised all persons living in incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the 1950 definition. (Of course, the incorporated places of 2,500 or more are urban in their own right.) Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

According to the new urban definition, the urban population of Wisconsin consisted of the following components: (1) The 1,906,363 inhabitants of the 105 incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more; (2) the 15,178 inhabitants of the 4 specially delineated unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more; and (3) 66,347 persons living outside of incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more in the urban fringes of Madison, Milwaukee, Racine, and the Wisconsin part of the urban fringe of Duluth (Minn.)--Superior (Wis.). As there were no places urban under special rule according to the old definition in Wisconsin, the population of the first element comprised the urban population under the old definition. The population of the remaining elements--81,525--represents the gain in the urban population which resulted from the change in definition.

POPULATION OF WYOMING: APRIL 1, 1950

(This is one of a series of reports presenting final population figures for selected areas in each State. In this series, reports are numbered alphabetically by States. Additional reports will be issued as final figures for other States become available)

The total population of Wyoming on April 1, 1950, was 290,529, according to final figures for the State released today by Roy V. Peel, Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce. During the previous 10 years, the population of the State increased by 39,787, or 15.9 percent, over the 250,742 inhabitants enumerated in 1940. Among the States and the District of Columbia, Wyoming ranked forty-eighth in population. The present population of Wyoming is about 32 times as large as its population 80 years ago when it was first enumerated in a Federal census.

In the past, the population of Wyoming has been predominantly rural. In 1950, however, the rural population of 145,911 was only slightly larger than the urban population. As a result of a 54.5 percent increase in the urban population and a decline of 7.2 percent in the rural population between 1940 and 1950, the proportion of the population of the State living in urban territory rose from 37.3 to 49.8 percent.

Between 1940 and 1950, 15 of Wyoming's 23 counties gained population and 8 lost population. Of the counties which lost population, all but two had no urban population. The counties of Wyoming ranged in size from Teton with a population of 2,593 to Laramie with a population of 7,662. Yellowstone National Park, the greater part of which is in Wyoming, is independent of any county organization.

Wyoming had a total of 89 incorporated places and 1 unincorporated place of 1,000 inhabitants or more. These places ranged in size from Lost Springs town with a population of 9 to Cheyenne city with a population of 31,935. The 89 incorporated places contained 182,870 inhabitants, or 62.9 percent of the total population of the State. Of these places, 19 had 2,500 inhabitants or more and a combined population of 144,618. The population of Fox Farm-Orchard Valley, the only unincorporated place, was 1,821.

Under the urban definition established for use in the 1950 Census, urban territory has been defined to comprise (a) places of 2,500 inhabitants or more incorporated as cities, boroughs, towns,¹ and villages; (b) the densely settled urban fringe, including both incorporated and unincorporated areas, around cities of 50,000 or more; and (c) unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more outside any urban fringe. All other territory is classified as rural. According to the definition used in previous censuses, urban territory was designated as all incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more and areas (usually minor civil divisions) classified as urban under special rules relating to population size and density.

In both definitions, the most important component of the urban territory is the group of incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. A definition of urban territory restricted to such places, however, would exclude a number of equally large and densely settled places, merely because they were not incorporated places. Under the old definition, an effort was made to avoid some of the more obvious omissions by the inclusion of the places urban under special rules. Even with these rules, however, many large and closely built-up places were excluded from the urban territory. To improve the situation in the 1950 Census, the Bureau of the Census set up, in advance of enumeration, boundaries for urban-fringe areas around cities of 50,000 or more and for unincorporated places outside urban fringes. All the population residing in urban-fringe areas and in unincorporated places of 2,500 or more is classified as urban according to the new definition. Consequently, the special rules of the old definition are no longer necessary.

In Wyoming, there were no unincorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more, no urban-fringe areas, and no areas urban under special rule according to the old definition. The distribution of the population of Wyoming by urban or rural residence, therefore, is the same according to either definition.
