

The standard error is a measure of sampling variability. The chances are about 2 out of 3 that the difference due to sampling variability between an estimate and the figure that would have been obtained from a complete count of the population is less than the standard error. The amount by which the standard error must be multiplied to obtain other odds deemed more appropriate can be found in most statistical textbooks. For example, the chances are about 19 out of 20 that the difference is less than twice the standard error, and 99 out of 100 that it is less than 2 1/2 times the standard error.

Illustration: Table 1 shows that there were an estimated 64,740 males employed in coal mining who were rural-farm residents (13.0 percent of the 497,670 total males employed in coal mining and 1.0 percent of the 6,792,270 employed male rural-farm residents). From linear interpolation in table B, it is found that the standard error of the estimate of 64,740 is about 1,390. Consequently, the chances are about 2 out of 3 that the figure that would have been obtained from a complete count of male rural-farm residents employed in coal mining differs by less than 1,390 from the sample estimate. It also follows that there is only about 1 chance in 100 that a complete census would differ by as much as 3,475, that is, by 2 1/2 times the standard error. It may be estimated from table C, also by linear interpolation, that the standard error of the 13.0 percent on the base of 497,670 is about 0.2 percent and that the standard error of the 1.0 percent on the base of 6,792,270 is less than 0.1 percent.

The standard errors shown in tables B and C are not directly applicable to differences between two estimates. The standard error of a difference is approximately the square root of the sum of the squares of the standard error of each estimate considered separately. This formula will represent the actual standard error quite accurately for the difference between separate and uncorrelated characteristics. (It can also be used to approximate the standard error of the difference between estimates shown here and corresponding figures shown in the 1940 Census special reports on industrial characteristics and wage or salary income.) In other cases, however, if there is a high positive correlation between the two characteristics, the formula will overestimate the true standard error.

Tables B and C are not directly applicable to the estimates of medians presented in this report. The sampling variability of estimates of medians depends on the distributions upon which the medians are based.<sup>4</sup>

The smaller figures and small differences between figures should be used with particular care because they are subject to larger relative error arising from sampling variability and processing and enumeration errors.

RATIO ESTIMATES

It is possible to make an improved estimate of an absolute number based on a sample (improved in the sense that the standard error is smaller) whenever the class in question forms a part of a larger group for which an estimate based on this sample and a complete count are both available. (Complete counts for the detailed industries appear in table A of this report and in table 130 of Volume II, Part 1.) This alternative estimate is particularly useful when the characteristic being estimated is a substantial part of the larger group; when the proportion is small, the improvement will be relatively minor. The improved estimate (usually referred to as a ratio estimate) may be obtained by multiplying a percentage based on sample data by the figure which represents the complete count of the base of the percentage. An alternative method is to multiply the sample estimate by the ratio of the complete count to the sample estimate of the larger group.

The effect of using ratio estimates of this type for data shown in this report is, in general, to reduce the relative sampling variability from that shown for an estimate of a given size in table B to that shown for the corresponding percentage in table C. Estimates of these types are not being published by the Bureau of the Census because of the much higher cost necessary for their preparation than for estimates derived by multiplying the sample results by 30.

<sup>4</sup> The standard error of a median based on the 3 1/3-percent sample may be estimated as follows: If the estimated total number reporting on the characteristic is N, compute the number  $\frac{N}{2} - 2.8\sqrt{N}$ . Cumulate the frequencies in the table until the class interval which contains this number is located. By linear interpolation, obtain the value below which  $\frac{N}{2} - 2.8\sqrt{N}$  cases lie. In a similar manner, obtain the value below which  $\frac{N}{2} + 2.8\sqrt{N}$  cases lie. If information on the characteristic had been obtained from the total population, the chances are about 2 out of 3 that the median would lie between these two values. The chances will be about 19 out of 20 that the median will be in the interval computed similarly but using  $\frac{N}{2} \pm 2(2.8)\sqrt{N}$  and about 99 in 100 that it will be in the interval obtained by using  $\frac{N}{2} \pm (2.5)(2.8)\sqrt{N}$ .
