

POPULATION—UNITED STATES SUMMARY

This bulletin, prepared under the supervision of Dr. Leon E. Truesdell, chief statistician for population, summarizes the population of the United States as returned in the 1930 census, by States, for cities and other urban areas arranged in groups according to size, and for incorporated places having from 1,000 to 2,500 inhabitants. Comparative figures are presented for the States and the larger cities for all censuses, beginning with the first in which the area was represented. For the counties and smaller cities, comparative figures are given for at least one earlier census. The population of the townships or corresponding minor civil divisions of the counties in the several States, and of incorporated places having less than 1,000 inhabitants, may be found in the State bulletins referred to in the next paragraph, or in Volume I of the Fifteenth Census Reports.

State bulletins.—The results of the count of the population covered by the Fifteenth Census, taken as of April 1, 1930, were first published in a series of State bulletins, each entitled "Population Bulletin, First Series, Number and Distribution of Inhabitants." These bulletins give the population of each State by counties and minor civil divisions (townships, districts, precincts, etc.), with separate figures for cities, towns, villages, and other incorporated places. Similar bulletins were issued for the outlying territories and possessions, except the Philippine Islands, for which no census was taken in 1930. These bulletins, together with this United States Summary Bulletin, have been assembled and bound together to make Volume I of the Fifteenth Census Reports.¹ Each State bulletin gives, for the State to which it relates, the 1930 population of all geographic areas and subdivisions for which official figures are available. The volume, which contains all the bulletins, therefore presents the population figures for all the officially recognized geographic subdivisions of the United States. The statistics are limited, however, to the total population of the various areas, without classification by color, sex, age, or any other characteristics, such classification being reserved for other series of bulletins and other volumes of the Census Reports.

Unincorporated places.—There is some demand for population figures for unincorporated villages or places, but since these places have no definitely established boundaries it has not been found possible to secure returns for their population sufficiently reliable to justify inclusion in the official census returns. Approximate figures were secured in 1930 for considerable numbers of unincorporated villages, however, and upon request for the population of any specific village, these approximate figures will be furnished by the Census Bureau, if available.

Enumeration at usual place of abode.—For the country as a whole, and for every State and every political subdivision within the State, the population enumerated is the resident population. The enumerators under the census law were instructed to enumerate persons at "their usual place of abode"—that is, at their permanent homes or regular lodging places. Hence persons were not in all cases counted in the places where they happened to be found by the enumerators; in particular, they were not always counted in places where they worked or carried on their daily occupations. Thus it happens that the business or industrial population of any large city includes a considerable number of persons who are not counted as a part of the census population of the city. These persons carry on their business or perform their daily tasks, spend a considerable proportion of their incomes, and perhaps even eat all or part of their meals, in the city, but have their residences or lodging places outside the municipal limits.

Persons temporarily absent from their usual places of abode—for example, persons away from home on a visit or on business, traveling for pleasure, attending school or college, or sick in a hospital—were enumerated at their homes or the places where they usually live, information regarding them being obtained from some other member of their family, or from relatives or acquaintances. Persons having no regular place of abode anywhere, however, were enumerated where they were found at the time of the enumeration.

United States and possessions.—Table 1 shows the population of the United States and its outlying territories and possessions for 1930, 1920, and 1910. In the other tables of this bulletin the figures are limited to what has been termed continental United States, that is, the 48 States and the District of Columbia.

⁹ Population Nov. 1, 1917. ¹⁰ Population in 1911.

¹¹ This item represents the following class of persons: Officers and enlisted men in the military service abroad; persons in the service of the American Red Cross abroad, or in the Consular Service of the United States abroad, together with members of their families who were actually residing with them at their post of duty; and officers and enlisted men in the naval service abroad or in American waters, but not on fixed station.

Population of continental United States from 1790.—The area now forming the 48 States and the District of Columbia was first completely enumerated in 1890, though the whole area, except for what is now the State of Oklahoma, was included also in the censuses of 1860, 1870, and 1880. The gradual increase in the territory covered by the census may be indicated as follows:

The First Census, taken in 1790, covered the area now occupied by the District of Columbia and the following States: Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky, and Tennessee.

In 1800 there was added the area now constituting the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin, and the southern parts of Alabama and Mississippi.

In 1810 there were further additions comprising the territory now forming the States of Louisiana, Arkansas, and Missouri, and the northern parts of Mississippi and Alabama.

In 1820 there was no change in the census area. In 1830, Florida was added, and in 1840, Iowa territory, including the greater part of what is now Minnesota.

In 1850 still further additions were made, comprising the territory which now forms Washington, Oregon, California, Utah, Texas, and most of New Mexico.

In 1860 the area covered was brought up to its present extent, except for Oklahoma.

Table 2 shows the population and area of continental United States from 1790 to 1930, with the decennial increase, the land area, and the population per square mile.

² In comparing this percentage of increase with that shown for the decade 1910-1920, allowance should be made for the fact that the period between the censuses of 1910 and 1920 was less than a full decade, and that between the 1920 and 1930 censuses was more than a full decade. An increase of 16.1 per cent for 123 months (the time between Jan. 1, 1920, and Apr. 1, 1930) is equivalent to 15.7 per cent for exactly 10 years; and the 1920 increase for 116½ months (the time between Apr. 15, 1910, and Jan. 1, 1920) is equivalent to 15.4 per cent for 120 months. Making this adjustment, the rate of increase for the decade ending in 1930 is only slightly higher than that for the preceding decade.

Urban and rural areas.—The distinction between the urban population and the rural population of the United States is based on the classification of areas, the urban population being that living in the urban areas, and the rural population that living in the rural areas.

Urban areas, as defined by the Census Bureau in recent censuses, have included all cities and other incorporated places having 2,500 inhabitants or more. For use in connection with the 1930 census the definition has been slightly modified and extended so as to include townships and other political subdivisions (not incorporated as municipalities, nor containing any areas so incorporated) which had a total population of 10,000 or more, and a population density of 1,000 or more per square mile. This extension adds to the urban group 11 townships in New Jersey (population, 208,722), 10 townships in Pennsylvania (population, 210,505), 4 towns in Connecticut (population, 87,086), 2 townships in California (population, 48,992), and 1 town in New York (population, 18,024). The aggregate population of these 28 places, which would have been classified as rural under the rules governing the urban-rural classification in 1920, is 573,329.

In three of the New England States, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island, conditions are exceptional in that the compactly built portions of the towns (townships) are not separately incorporated or politically distinct in any way from the rural territory within the same town; nor is it the practice to incorporate even the larger places as cities until they attain a population of ten or fifteen thousand. Consequently, if only the cities were counted in the urban population the classification would be quite inadequate. In 1920 and 1910 all towns in these States which had a population of 2,500 or more were classified as urban. This resulted in including a considerable number of places that were mainly rural in their general characteristics. In 1930, the special rule for these States has been modified so as to place in the urban classification, in addition to the regularly incorporated cities, only those towns in which there is a village or thickly settled area having more than 2,500 inhabitants and comprising, either by itself or when combined with other villages within the same town, more than 50 per cent of the total population of the town. The result of this modification has been to transfer from the urban to the rural classification 12 towns in New Hampshire (population, 35,389), 56 towns in Massachusetts (population, 218,231), and 8 towns in Rhode Island (population, 35,001) which would have been counted as urban if the 1920 rule had been followed in 1930. The aggregate population in 1930 of these towns which were in effect transferred from the urban to the rural classification is 288,621.

Since it has been found impracticable to go back and readjust the earlier urban and rural figures to the new basis, through the several tabulations by color, sex, age, etc., they are presented in all tables as established in 1920. The comparative figures therefore show differences, in a few cases, which must be considered or interpreted as solely or mainly the result of the change in the method of classification. This is particularly true of the nominal or apparent increase in the rural population of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, of the nominal decrease in the urban population of New Hampshire, and of the decrease in the percentage urban shown for all three of these States.

So far as concerns the urban and rural classification of the total population of the United States, it will be seen that the net result of the two changes described above is to increase the urban population by 284,708. In other words, if the classification had been made in 1930 on exactly the same basis as in 1920, the urban population would have been 68,670,115, instead of 68,954,823, and the percentage urban would have been 55.9 instead of 56.2.¹

The individual places which have been brought into the urban classification under the two special rules are included in the tables presenting the population of the various groups of cities (Tables 12 to 15), marked with an asterisk (*). A complete list of the urban places in any State may therefore be obtained by taking from each of these tables the places listed under the State name.

The total urban and rural population of the United States is presented for the census years from 1880 to 1930 in Table 3, and by States for 1930 and 1920, in Table 9.

Cities grouped according to size.—For the convenience of those who are interested in cities of various sizes, statistics are presented in Tables 11 to 15 for the cities and other urban places arranged in groups according to size. In Table 11 is presented the population of cities having 100,000 inhabitants or more in 1930, with comparative figures running back to the first census in which the city appears. Table 12 shows the population of places having 25,000 inhabitants or more in 1930, with comparative figures from 1900; Table 13 shows the population for 1930 and 1920 of cities and other urban places having from 10,000 to 25,000 inhabitants; Table 14 presents similar figures for places having from 5,000 to 10,000 inhabitants; and Table 15, for places having from 2,500 to 5,000 inhabitants. All of these places are included in the urban classification in 1930.

Table 16 shows the population of the larger incorporated places which are included in the rural classification, namely, those having from 1,000 to 2,500 inhabitants.²

The total population in each of these various groups is summarized for the United States in Table 8, which presents figures for the several censuses from 1890 to 1930. Table 10 gives the number of places in each of the city groups, with their population, by divisions and States, for 1930 only.

¹ The percentage urban in the population of New Jersey, if the 11 townships having a population of more than 10,000 and a population density of more than 1,000 per square mile had been classified as rural, as they would have been under the rule followed in 1920, would have been 77.5 instead of 82.6; likewise, under the 1920 rule, the urban population of Pennsylvania would have formed only 65.7 per cent of the total, instead of 67.8 per cent; the percentage of the population urban in Connecticut would have been 65.0 instead of 70.4; in California, 72.4 instead of 73.3; and in New York, 83.4 instead of 83.6. On the other hand, if all the towns having 2,500 inhabitants or more had been included in the urban population of New Hampshire, as they would have been under the rule followed in 1920, the percentage urban would have been 66.8 instead of 58.7; likewise, under the 1920 rule, the percentage of the population urban in Massachusetts would have been 95.3 instead of 90.2; and in Rhode Island, 97.5 instead of 92.4.

² The population of the smaller incorporated places in any State is shown in Table 5 in the First Series Bulletin (or in the section for that State in Volume I).

Population in places of 8,000 or more: 1790 to 1930.—The present urban and rural classification, with the basic requirement of population of 2,500 in an incorporated place in order to give it urban classification, was established in 1910, and the figures were compiled for the censuses back to and including 1880. It would hardly be practicable to carry this classification back further. A table has been presented in the Census Reports for many decades, however, giving the population in places of 8,000 inhabitants or more, back to the First Census, that of 1790. These figures are given in Table 4.

Counties.—The population is shown by counties, for 1930 and 1920, in Table 17, together with the land area and the number of persons per square mile for 1930. The population density is shown graphically, by counties, on the map on page 9.

Institutions.—The population of institutions and military posts is included as a part of the population of the city, township, or other political area in which the institution or post is located. This institution population in some cases forms an appreciable fraction of the total population of the city or town; and sometimes it seriously affects the distribution of the total by sex, age, or other characteristics. It has not been found practicable, however, to make any general provision for showing separately the population of the institutions. In most cases the approximate population of the institution is readily available, so that due allowance may be made for its inclusion. In fact, the Census Bureau is in a position to furnish the 1930 census population of any of the larger institutions on request.

Farm population.—Statistics for the farm population, that is, the population actually living on farms, which is distinct from the rural population, are presented in the Second and Third Series of Population Bulletins (composition and characteristics of the population), and in the volumes devoted to the detailed classification of the population data.

¹ The total number of places of certain classes for the United States as a whole is less than the sum of the numbers shown for the individual States in Table 10, for the reason that there are a few places which lie in two adjoining States and are counted in each State. In 1930, these places included Bluefield (Virginia and West Virginia), Bristol (Tennessee and Virginia), Dolmar (Delaware and Maryland), Harrison and West Harrison (Ohio and Indiana), Junction City (Arkansas and Missouri), Texarkana (Arkansas and Texas), Texhoma (Oklahoma and Texas), and Union City (Indiana and Ohio). Each of these places consists of two incorporated municipalities, but is, from the statistical standpoint, one place and is classed according to its total population. In each case that part of the population living in each State, whatever its number, is credited to the group to which, according to its total population, the place belongs. There are included in some of the groups in this table a small number of places not having a municipal incorporation, which are classified as urban in 1930 under special ruling (see p. 6).

TABLE 12.—POPULATION OF CITIES AND OTHER URBAN PLACES HAVING, IN 1930, 25,000 INHABITANTS OR MORE: 1900 TO 1930

[Besides the cities, there are included in this table a small number of places not having a regular municipal incorporation, which are classified as urban for 1930; these are listed in the table with their proper designations, as townships, towns, etc. Except as explained in footnotes, population shown for each census year does not include that of territory subsequently annexed. A minus sign (—) denotes decrease]

⁴ An act of the Georgia State Legislature, approved Aug. 23, 1929, provides for the establishment of the "Municipality of 'Macon,'" including therein, in addition to the city of Macon, one other city and three unincorporated communities. The act further provides that "for the purposes of this act only" these cities "shall be known as boroughs" but that it shall not be unlawful to refer to them as cities. The population of the "Municipality of 'Macon'" as thus defined, and of its constituent areas, is as follows:

|--|--------|
| Municipality of "Macon"..... | 64,045 |
| Macon city or borough..... | 53,829 |
| Payne city or borough..... | 28 |
| Unincorporated communities, Nos. 1 to 3..... | 9,790 |
