AGRICULTURE

DEFINITIONS AND EXPLANATION OF TERMS

Census dates.—The census of 1930 relates to April 1 of that year and the crop year 1929. The censuses of 1925 and 1920 relate to January 1 of those years and the crop years, 1924 and 1919, respectively. The date upon which the census is taken is important, inasmuch as it directly affects the number of farms and farm population and the number and age classes of livestock, etc., because all of these items change with the season.

Farm.—A "farm" for census purposes, is all the land which is directly farmed by one person, either by his labor alone or with the assistance of members of his household or hired employees. The land operated by a partnership is likewise considered a farm. A "farm" may consist of a single tract of land or of a number of separate tracts, and these several tracts may be held under different tenures, as when one tract is owned by the farmer and another tract is rented by him. When a landowner has one or more tenants, renters, croppers, or managers, the land operated by each is considered a farm. Thus on a plantation the land operated by each cropper or tenant was reported as a separate farm, and the land operated by the owner or manager by means of wage hands, likewise, was reported as a separate farm. The enumerators were instructed not to report as a farm any tract of land of less than 3 acres, unless its agricultural products in 1929 were valued at $250 or more.

The definition of a farm used in the 1930 census was the same as for 1925; that for 1920 contained an additional provision with regard to a farm of less than 3 acres, as follows: "* * * or which required for its agricultural operations the continuous services of at least one person." It is possible that the difference in the number of farms shown for 1930 and 1925 as compared with 1920 is to some extent due to this change in the definition of a farm.

Farm operator.—A "farm operator," according to the census definition, is a person who operates a farm, either performing the labor himself or directly supervising it.

Color of farm operator.—Farm operators are classified as white and colored, the white including Mexicans and Hindus, and the colored including Negroes, Indians, Chinese, Japanese, and all other nonwhite races.

Tenure.—Farm operators are classified, according to the tenure under which they operate their farms, into four general classes, as follows:

Full owners are farm operators who own all the land which they operate.

Part owners are farm operators who own part of the land which they operate, and rent and operate additional land. Part owners, therefore, have some of the characteristics of full owners and some of the characteristics of tenants.

Managers are farm operators who operate farms or ranches for the owners, receiving wages or salaries for their services.

Tenants are farm operators who operate hired land only. In the present report separate figures are shown for three classes of tenants—namely, (1) cash tenants who pay a cash rental, as $7 per acre for crop land or $500 for the use of the whole farm; (2) croppers (reported only for the Southern States), who are defined as share tenants, to whom landlords furnish all the work animals; and (3) all other tenants, including those giving a share of the products for the use of the land or a share for part and cash for part.

Land in farms.—The acreage designated as "All land in farms" includes considerable areas of land not actually under cultivation and some not even used for pasture, since each farmer was asked to report as a unit all the land under his control, or rather all the land which he thought of as a part of his farm. Isolated tracts of timberland and other areas not connected with the farm were not included.

The following classes of farm land, based on the uses made of the land in 1929, are shown separately. This classification of farm land was first presented in the reports of the census of 1925.

Crop land.—The total crop land consists of the three classes of land, as follows:

1. Crop land harvested in 1929, comprising all land from which cultivated crops were harvested, all land from which hay was cut (including wild hay cut within the limits of the farm), and all land in small fruits, orchards, vineyards, gardens, nurseries, and greenhouses. A given acreage was counted but once, even though two or more crops were harvested from it.

2. Crop failure, comprising land from which no crop was harvested in 1929 because of crop failure or destruction from any cause, including drought, flood, insects, or disease.

3. Idle or fallow land, comprising crop land which was lying idle or which was in cultivated summer fallow in 1929.

Pasture land.—The total pasture land consists of three classes, as follows:

1. Plowable pasture, comprising land used only for pasture in 1929 which could have been plowed and used for crops without clearing, draining, or irrigating.

2. Woodland pasture, comprising woodland used for pasture at any time during 1929. (Woodland pasture includes all farm wood lots or timber tracts, natural or planted, and cut-over land with young growth; but excludes chaparral and woody shrubs.)

3. Other pasture, comprising all land used for pasture in 1929 which was not included under plowable pasture or woodland pasture.

Woodland not used for pasture.—Under this heading is reported all woodland included in the farm acreage but not pastured in 1929.

All other land in farms.—Under this heading are included all rough, swampy, or waste lands not in forest, pasture, or crops; and also the land occupied by buildings, barnyards, feed lots, roads, ditches, etc.

Crops.—Great changes have occurred in crops in the past 10 years, brought about by the automobile and improved farm machinery, with a consequent decrease in the number of horses and the acreage required to provide their feed.

In comparing one year with another it should be remembered that acreage is usually a better index of progress or change than either production or value, because of unfavorable seasons and wide variations in value, which may result from changes in prices depending upon economic conditions.

The acreage statistics of the 1930 census cover practically all crop acreages of major importance, and are presented in such form as to show totals approximately comparable with 1920. Attention is directed to some of the principal differences between the statistics of 1920 and 1930, and to the points which need explanation.

Among the most important of these are interplanted or companion crops, which result in duplications, and which while appearing in the acreage detail are not included in the total acreage. Annual legumes which are recorded for "all purposes," are also included, where proper, in the detail figures "Annual legumes saved for hay" and hay totals, but the acreage where there is duplication is used but once in securing the total acreage for all crops.

Land in fruit orchards, vineyards, and planted nut trees appears for the first time in 1929.

The acreage for corn fodder included the acreage from which fodder was secured as a by-product in 1919, but in 1929 the acreage for fodder only was secured independently and did not include that from which corn was husked or snapped.

Clover seed, alfalfa seed, and timothy seed had acreage reports in 1929 but not in 1919. There is some duplication between these items and the acreage of these crops cut for hay, but it is not possible to segregate such duplications, and the relatively small acreages are therefore included in the total. Sweetclover for pasture is not added in crop acreage totals, but is included in pasture.

Attention is also directed to the important distinction between the total acreage of "Crops harvested" and the "Land from which crops were harvested." The difference between the two may be illustrated by succession crops, i. e., crops which follow other crops on the same land in the same calendar year, producing 2 acres of "Crops harvested" to 1 acre of "Land from which crops were harvested."

Condensation of crop groups, additions, and various changes somewhat affected the comparison of various crops, particularly hay crops, miscellaneous crops, and vegetables. The most important are covered by notes with the tables.

Production.—Production is so largely dependent on individual seasons that comparison of any two years may be misleading, particularly if a bad crop year be compared with a good one. However, increased or decreased production usually accompanies substantial increases or decreases in acreage. Perhaps the most important changes shown in this census are the decrease in cereals, taken together, and hay, and the most interesting, the increase in many garden vegetables which show the change and improvement that has taken place in the diet of a large part of the population in the last 10 years.

Values.—The level of farm prices has changed greatly since 1920. In that year following the World War, prices were greatly inflated and those of 1930 also represent an abnormal year when a rapid decrease was taking place. While the comparison of values in the two years does not give us a satisfactory measure of trend it gives a good picture of the difference in farm conditions in the two years.

Type of farm.¹—The classification of farms by type appears in a detailed way for the first time in the 1930 census. A somewhat similar classification was made in the 1900 census, but it was made on a different basis and in considerably less detail.

The following types of farms, based on principal source of income, have been distinguished: General, cash-grain, cotton, crop-specialty, fruit, truck, dairy, animal-specialty, stock-ranch, poultry, self-sufficing, abnormal, and unclassified.

Basis of classification.—Source of income, that is, the value of products from a particular source in relation to the value of products from all sources, is the primary basis used in classifying the farm by type. "Source" relates to the product, or products, from which the income is derived resulting from the sale of a single product in certain cases and from the sale of a group of products in other cases. Products used on the farm itself are not included except those for family consumption, which were estimated by the farmer. Farm products used by the operator's family include the estimated value of meat, milk, poultry, eggs, honey, vegetables, fruits, firewood, etc. (rent of farmer's dwelling excluded), furnished by the farm for the use of the farm family in 1929.

"Total value" of all products includes the value of crops sold, traded, or to be sold, livestock, and livestock products sold or traded, forest products sold, and farm products used by the operator's family; but excludes receipts from boarders, lodgers, etc.

For nine of the major types—cash-grain, cotton, crop-specialty, fruit, truck, dairy, poultry, stock-ranch, and animal-specialty—the classification was determined on the basis of 40 per cent or more of the total value of all products of the farm coming from one of these particular sources. For each of these types, sales (or anticipated sales) of the following products or groups of products represent 40 per cent or more of the total value of all products of the farm:

Cash-grain.—Corn, wheat, oats, barley, flax, rye, emmer and spelt, buckwheat, rice, and grain sorghum.

Cotton.—Cotton (lint) and cottonseed.

Crop-specialty.—Sweet sorghum for sirup, sugarcane, sugar beets, maple sugar and sirup, soybeans, cowpeas, velvetbeans, and ripe field peas and beans, tobacco, hay, peanuts, white potatoes, sweetpotatoes, mushrooms, and other minor crops.

Fruit.—Small fruits, tree fruits, nuts, and grapes.

Truck.—All vegetables sold.

Dairy.—Milk, cream, butterfat, butter, and dairy cows and calves.

Poultry.—Chickens, ducks, geese, turkeys, and eggs.

Animal-specialty and stock-ranch.—All classes of meat animals, such as beef cattle, sheep, and hogs, also wool, mohair, and slaughtered animals for both types.

The chief distinction between stock-ranch and animal-specialty farms lies in the ratio of the pasture land to the crop land. A stock-ranch is a type of organization in which chief emphasis is placed upon the production of livestock by grazing, while an animal-specialty farm is one in which more emphasis is placed upon the production of crops and feeding of livestock.

In differentiating stock-ranch from animal-specialty farms it was necessary, because of variation in the quality of pasture, to use two limits for this ratio of crops to pasture, one for the territory lying, roughly, east of a line extending north and south through the approximate middle of the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Texas, and the other for the area lying west of that line. Thus, east of this line, where the acreage in pasture was five times the acreage in crops, it was classified as a "stock-ranch," and where less than five times, as an "animal-specialty" farm. West of the designated line, a larger ratio applied, so that where the acreage in pasture was ten times that in crops, it was classified as a "stock-ranch," and where less than ten times, as an "animal-specialty" farm.

In the Western States, farms reporting considerable numbers of cattle or sheep and little or no pasture land, but which were evidently using public land for grazing, were classified as stock-ranches.

The basis for classifying the remaining two major and the abnormal types was as follows:

General.—Farms were classified as "general" where the value of products from any one source did not represent so much as 40 per cent of the total value of all products of the farm. If the value of products from each of two sources represented 40 per cent or more of the total, the farm was classified as "general," except for specialized combination types, such as cotton-tobacco, fruit-truck, etc., when it was classified as one or the other of these types, depending upon which was dominant in the locality.

Self-sufficing.—Where the value of the farm products used by the family was 50 per cent or more of the total value of all products of the farm, it was classified as self-sufficing.

Abnormal.—Farms were classified as "abnormal" when agriculture, as such, did not appear to be the primary occupation of the farm operator. This class was divided into five subtypes, as follows: Institution or country estate, part-time, boarding and lodging, forest-product, and horse farm, feed lot, or livestock dealer.

Unclassified.—Where the farm was not operated in 1929, but was in operation in 1930, or where the report of the quantity of crops and livestock produced and sold was incomplete, or where other information was missing, the farm was not classified by type.

Reports on agriculture.—The agricultural statistics presented in the Abstract are taken principally from Volume IV, General Report—Statistics by Subjects, which in turn is a summarization of the State and county data, which are shown in detail in Volumes I, II, and III. Each of the volumes is made up of a series of separate bulletins by States or by subjects, most of which can be obtained in separate form by those desiring them. ¹ Figures relate to "owned" farms—that is, to farms operated by their owners. Owners who hired some additional land (part owners) are included. No mortgage data were secured for farms operated by managers or tenants.

² In the reports of the 1890 census all owned farm homes without mortgage report were distributed between the two groups, "mortgaged" and "free from mortgage." For purposes of comparison the number of these farm homes which was assigned to each group has been recomputed and subtracted, leaving the figures for 1890 approximately as reported.
